Primal Play

A dive into your instinct

What Will Be Presented

Primal Play Introduction: What Is It? What Is It Not?

Primal Play: Common Language

Primal Play Communication: Why Negotiation Is On Center Stage

Safety and Aftercare: A Priority

Primal Play Is Not For First Timers, But Why?

Instinct: What It Can Be, And How It Can Differ From RP

Primal Play Examples! WEE!

How To Get Into A Primal Headspace : Tips, Tricks, And Space Setup Ideas

Links for more informations!

Primal Play Introduction : What Is It? What Is It Not?

First we have to debunk the idea of primal play. Often times it has been vulgarised as acting like animals and rough sex. However that fails to cover the extent that primal play can be. Thus primal play can be more than what meets the eyes.

What if I told you primal play could be gentle, sweet? That would probably come to a surprise, yet makes absolute sense in a primal participant's mind. Why? Because the scope is quite large and it isn't just hunter and prey, while it is a common practice. It can also be caring like a wolf with their mate. It can be volatile fighting for dominance. It can be silly, playful and adorable. The key thing is to leave civilisation at the door and become one with what's inside. Is it a creature? Is it an animal? Is it a thing? A mythical beast? Only you know yourself, but the limits are typically endless

It also means, however, that it is a deeply vulnerable space for participants. It often requires for people to form packs, tribes, or something of the sort to feel safe, welcomed, and taken care of. Each of these have their own functions and ways of interacting. Primal play is a state that requires trust since it is a person's unique identity.

Primal Play Introduction : What Is It? What Is It Not?

This also means this isn't necessarily roleplay. It is to act as someone's person and very vulnerable true self, not some re-enacting of a wolf, for example. It isn't pet play. It can also be vaguely human, not just animalistic. This also means it is not always sexual. It can be rough, fighting, wrestling, or it can be soft, gentle, nurturing and caring.

Importantly, there is a notion that conversations about boundaries, control, and base instincts are thrown out of the window. Quite the opposite, in fact - there needs to be MORE communication done to understand one another during a scene. It is also required to know when to stop and accept each other's boundaries. Needless to say…

It is NOT an excuse to not control yourself.

Instincts can be controlled. Harnessed. Wielded in a freeing way.
They should not be an excuse for abuse.

Dominant and submissive are not used in Primal context. Two Dominants may want to cuddle, and two submissives may want to fight. And vice versa.

Primal Play: Common Language

- Alpha/Beta/Omega: A typical dynamic made popular thanks to wolves (and a very regretful scientist). Alpha often designates a dominant or head of a hierarchy, a beta in the middle and finally the omega as subservient. It's loosely defined.

- Hunter/Predator/Prey: Predator is a common term used for those who feeds on the prey. Some are more hunters, there for the chase and the spirit of the hunt itself. Preys are the beautiful targets, the willing to get chased.

- Mate/Pet: Mate is often a term to mean someone within the group who is close to them. It often means a serious relationship between the two, creating a held bond. It is not used lightly. Pet carries another meaning in this space. It's more someone under the status of mate, but above the status of friend. It's more light but still carries a kind of relationship.

Primal Play Communication: Why Negotiation Is On Center Stage

Negotiation before a scene is CRITICAL. It is a common question if one or both partners become generally non-verbal during the exchange. Plus, many generally dislike the use of words and prefer to use body language, growls and other ways to communicate.

It sounds simple with say, a wolf. It growls. You back up. Okay.
Say the person is a snake. When they do a rattle sound, they are disliking something and warning you. How many in the room would have known this? Would anyone have known that they were doing a rattle sound? It isn't always obvious, and to know your potential dynamic partner is a snake is kind of important. They will also have their own body language and own sounds they will do. So this needs to be all communicated BEFORE any attempt at primal play. And that is, if you even know what it is.

A small reminder, RACK and PRICK are ESSENTIAL. Know what you are getting into and the potential risks. Is there going to be biting? Scratches? Are you wrestling? What are the risks? Are you chasing them in the woods? What happens if you get lost? This is just to give ideas.

Primal Play Communication: Why Negotiation Is On Center Stage

Obviously I consider the basic of BDSM to be covered, so some of the negotiation overlap. For example, asking for experience, what they like ect. But there are some key primal questions that can be asked. We will share a document I found freely on the internet, but here are some key negotiation questions from there:

Questions to ask During a Negotiation
- What is your previous experience with Primal Play, if any?
- Is this a sexual experience for you? What does that mean?
- How do you normally prefer to communicate during a scene?
- Do you go non-verbal, have trouble communicating, or have trouble hearing a safeword?
- What are your aftercare needs

Key thing is, don't assume what primal play is! It can take many forms, and requires understanding and communication for it to work. But if you are walking in expecting a massage from an alpha and instead get wrestled to the ground, it probably won't be a fun time for you. Especially if you got wrestled to the ground because you did the wrong kind of noise. Y'know?

Safety and Aftercare: A priority

While it can be extremely soft, it can also be extremely violent. Know what the scene will entail and prepare before hand. Again, RACK and PRICK as noted in the picture to the side. If you wrestle, know how to NOT permanently injure your partner. Scratches, how to care for them. Where to not bite. From another source, which will be linked below, here is Wiley Wolfe's base aftercare kit:

- General First Aid Kit
- 70% Isopropyl Alcohol
- Knee Pads (if wrestling/active)
- Safer Sex Supplies (if applicable)
- Drop Cloths or Puppy Pads (if there are fluid concerns)

These scenes can be emotionally intense and because of the vulnerability, the "weirdness" of it and how it breaks social norms, it may be a need to reassure the partner in this case. Even in a soft scene, this may be destabilising. They need to restructure and get back to the normal social acceptable way of life. Going for a walk, a movie, a bath. Plan something to relax. It is usually a very intense emotional experience so plan plenty of time just in case.

Primal play is not for first timer : Why?

The intense negotiation requires a strong communication and a deep understanding of oneself. While primal play can be a massage, can be soft and protective, a way to communicate is still necessary. But that requires knowing one's limit very well, to be able to tell them BEFORE the scene, and to also still manage communication if needed during the scene.

First and foremost the person needs to know how to do negotiation, and how to do it well. That is something that often needs time and experience. Plus, you can only negotiate what you know; if you are exploring, it is better to go at a slower pace and it needs to be communicated.

It's also to know yourself enough to stop something before it goes down a slippery slope. If the partner reads wrongly, they may take a direction that is undesirable. It's very easy to slide down when nonverbal communication is at play, and when altered mindset happen.

Primal play is not for first timer : Why?

Ex. You go nonverbal during primal play scenes. You have a specific whine that's a pitch to stop, but the hunter takes it as a whine of joy or pleasure. It continues. You try to push them off, but they take this as a playful fight. Until they see, finally, something is off. Ensues issues.

Thus, it is probably best to know the basics and know yourself before adventuring in these waters. It is an extremely fulfilling experience, but it requires slow, clear communication, and a truly trusting dynamic. Also, there are many steps one can do to achieve a primal state, but it's not always unlocked. Sometimes there may be some research required, to test out the sounds alone, to see what fits you. It requires a good knowledge of yourself to be able to fully let go in this vulnerable state. And that is also a key thing: this is an extremely vulnerable, easily judgemental state, even within the BDSM community. There is a reason finding sources was difficult.

Instinct : What it can be, and how it can differ from RP

And so there is also a key difference that requires to be made here. Primal play is not, by the do-er, considered Roleplay. Why? It is not purely acting like an animal. It is not playing as if we were that animal like an actor playing a character. Roleplay is acting as someone or something else. Primal play is acting like ourselves without the social construct. This may turn into acting or performing things closer to an animal of the person's choice, but ultimately it is a way of showing their inner selves, and being able to communicate in a way that feels comfortable.

Thus, some people may have a language that is more human. Some may do noises that are probably closer to an alien. All that matters is that they communicate how they feel comfortable, safe, and truly themselves. This is why there was talk in the previous slides to learn about yourself, because ultimately, you are learning to be you. Unrestrained, uncivilised, you. Which, reminder, can be emotionally intense.

It is not to say some do not give themselves a role, but it should be by its base to be your own self. That still does not excuse to have no control, or to unleash it completely outside of agreed boundaries.

A small note: You can have multiple primal identities. Example: Maybe for a prey you are a hunter, relentless and heartless, but for your mate, you are a protector and caretaker.

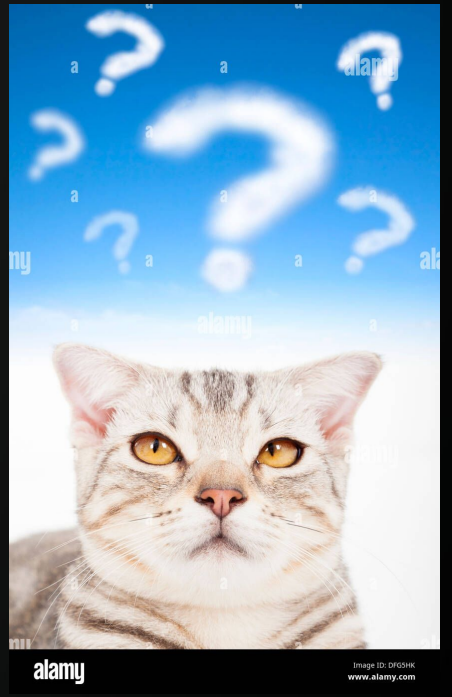

Primal Play Examples! WEE

To begin… What do YOU think?

Do you have ideas of primal play now?

Open discussion before we give examples!

(C’mon, that’s the fun part!)

Primal Play Examples! WEE Cont.

Primal Play Scene Ideas
- Takedown and capture
- Rough body play, wrestling
- Hide-and-go-seek
- Tease and chasing around the house, aka light rough body play
- Resistance play
- Sensory exploration
- Grooming behaviors (hair brushing, licking)
- Acts of service (preparing a “nest”, getting food, etc)
- Primal dancing
- Restraint and bondage, especially with hands, body, or natural materials.

- Massage
- Pressure points
- Sharing food
- Wet and messy play
- Pinching, tickling
- Claws, biting, hair-pulling
- Blood, esp. fake blood
- Watersports
- Spitting
- Breeding roleplay
- Tools such as feathers, porcupine
quills, stones, or metal claws
- Primal vocalizations (growling, howling, purring, etc)
- Knifeplay “skinning”

How do get into a Primal headspace : Tips, tricks, and space set up ideas, pt. 1

Research. You can research what animal you may potentially like. You can find guides to fill out and help you learn about yourself. This may head you into a direction to find your primal headspace. Sometimes you may find ASMR videos or song that triggers you. Importantly, find what works for you.

Connection is important, so sometimes you can try something with a partner to trigger this trust and bond. This would honestly be good for, Almost all BDSM scenes, so feel free to incorporate it:

Shared breathing with a partner: While in a comfortable pose such as sitting with your legs crossed, get as physically close to your partner as you can. Place one of your hands on their chest, and have them place one hand on your chest. Synchronize your breathing and take deep, slow, diaphragmatic breaths. Visualize your connection with your partner. If close enough, touch your foreheads together and continue breathing. See what energy naturally arises out of this exchange.

There are other techniques in the provided document. Asking others is always a valid idea :D

How do get into a Primal headspace : Tips, tricks, and space set up ideas, pt. 1

Another one that is important is space. Find a world or make a space. With VR we forget some of our senses that important for our primal selves. Temperature, lighting, sight, sound, touch, and smell.

Temperature. Who knows, maybe a wintery world sounds more fun for a chase. Maybe they would enjoy hot springs for a nice massage. Consider what the scene is about and keep the temperature you want to broadcast in your mind.

Lighting can be critical for some people, so always check. A hunter who stalks in the dark may not like a daytime world. It also depends on the partners and such. Are you doing a small picnic at the park? Then bright light might be lovely.

Sight should be obvious, but I doubt many would find big tall building and a cyber city as provoking for primal play (no judging, if you can I (Ari) will bow to you!!). Find a place that feels comfortable for the scene, but also for the person. Do you want destroyed building, a calm forest, or fantasy land? Your choice.

How do get into a Primal headspace : Tips, tricks, and space set up ideas, pt. 1

Sounds. Normally nature sounds, ASMR, or primal drums may help you in the headspace.

Touch is a tricky one in VR. Because often time, touch in primal play is affected by haptic feedback, while in VR, phantom sense needs sight or sound. Maybe make sure to show you are touching them, or know where they have placed their mirrors to help you. Maybe a pre-emptive scene to help the sense of touch should be considerated.

Smell. It is often a forgotten thing in VR. If you are lucky to smell in VR, good for you! But don’t be afraid to also light a candle in your room, burn some incense, maybe have essential oils. Be safe, but it can be a wonderful trigger.

Conclusion…

Primal play is a complex level of play with many different styles inside of it. It covers a wide range of kinks, but the main focus is to be yourself, uncivilised, in a safe environment.

I hope you enjoyed this class, feel free for QnA!

LINKS

101

https://domsubliving.com/wp-content/uploads/THE-PRIMAL-PLAY-REFERENCE-GUIDE.pdf <- REALLY GOOD GRAB IT

https://www.lovense.com/sex-blog/kink-bdsm/primal-fetish <- surprisingly good

Extra courses/items $$$$:

https://wileywolfe.gumroad.com/

https://www.patreon.com/cw/passionandsoul/membership

Softer primal play

https://www.paulinabolek.com/primalplay

Links Cont.

Discussions/Blogs

https://ironwynch.com/2015/02/primal-fetish-relationships-predator-mate-and-prey/

https://sofiagray.com/blog/an-introduction-to-primal-play/

https://www.oxy-shop.com/blogs/bdsm-blog/what-is-primal-play-bdsm

https://www.wolfspirit.org/primals-in-the-kink-community

https://www.eastcoastkinkevents.com/blog/what-is-primal-play-bdsm

https://kinkycuriosity.com/primal-vs-primal-play/