

Putting On A Kinky Show

An Exploration of Exhibitionism, Voyeurism, and Performative Kink Play

What This Class Will Teach You

- An introduction to Exhibitionism and what it's about.
- An introduction to Voyeurism and what it's about.
- An introduction to Performative Kink Play and what it's about.
- How all three of these areas of kink overlap with each other.

Exhibitionism In The Vanilla World

- Exhibitionism is defined as a compulsive behavior (or in some cases, a sexual disorder) defined by recurrent, intense urges to expose one's genitals to unsuspecting strangers for sexual arousal, or a strong desire to be observed during sexual activity.
- It's considered a clinical disorder when it causes significant distress or involves non-consenting individuals, and is usually treated with psychotherapy and medication.
- Causes are usually linked to traumatic behaviors and traumatic sexualization.
- Exhibitionism is considered to be a potential form of paraphilia, which is an uncommon, intense, and persistent sexual arousal or attraction to anything not sexual by nature.

Exhibitionism In The Vanilla World

Types of exhibitionistic behaviors include:

- Anasyrma: Skirt lifting while not wearing underwear.
- Candaulism: Exposing one's partner in a sexually provocative manner.
- Flashing: The momentary display of one's breasts or genitalia before quickly covering back up.
- Mooning: Flashing one's butt at someone else.
- Reflectoporn: Taking photos of oneself while naked, but using indirect reflections in a photographed object instead of a direct selfie/mirror.
 - Ex. Using a kettle, TV screen, toaster, or silverware to show oneself while naked.
- Streaking: Running through a public place while naked.

Exhibitionism In Kink

- Exhibitionism in a kink setting is the practice of exposing one's intimate parts (breasts, genitals, buttocks, etc.) to consenting onlookers (specifically, other consenting kinksters present at a kink event).
- The reasons for indulging in Exhibitionism are varied, but they tend to gravitate towards boosting one's confidence about their self image, sexual gratification, and generally “showing off one's goods.”
- The key point in kinky exhibitionism is that it requires consent from others before it's engaged in.
- Any kink event that allows Exhibitionism to occur will have it stated in a waiver that attendees must read and sign so that they know what they're walking into. If the would-be attendee doesn't want to be present where Exhibitionists are doing their thing, they simply don't attend the event in question.

Voyeurism In The Vanilla World

- Voyeurism is the habit of watching others secretly while they engage in intimate behaviors, such as undressing or sexual activity, and is commonly for sexual stimulation.
- The general “thrill” that draws some to voyeurism is the nature of seeing something that’s not supposed to be seen while the viewer’s presence is unknown.
- It may be a form of paraphilia, as well.
- In the vanilla world, voyeurism is generally criminalized in cases when it’s non-consensual to peek in on others during intimate activities, or if it violates the expectation of privacy.

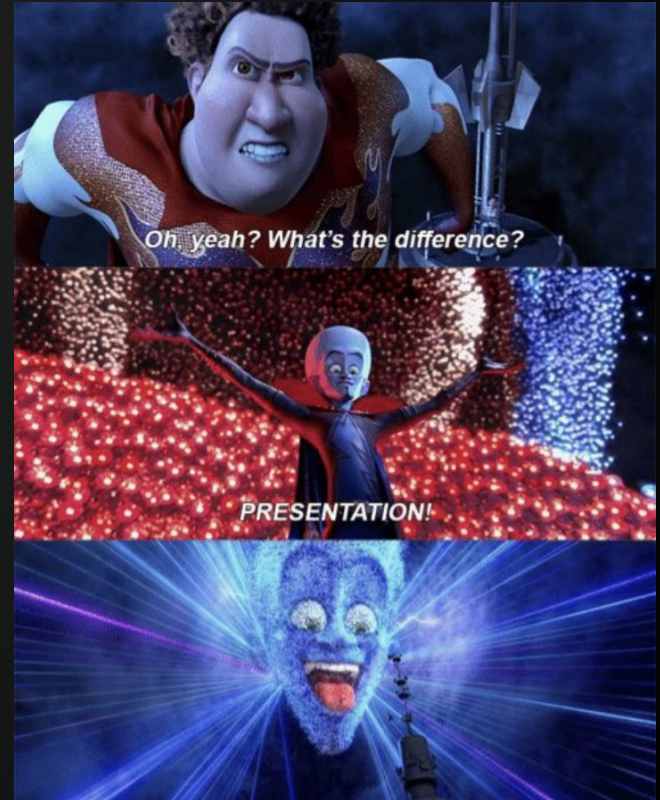

Voyeurism In Kink

- Much like with Exhibitionism, what separates Voyeurism in a kinky setting from that of the regular vanilla world is that consent must be involved before anyone engages in it.
- Through the use of clear communication during negotiations, voyeurism can be engaged in without upsetting anyone involved.
- Kinky voyeurism may be engaged in from unseen places, or it can be done with the viewers being in plain view of those whom they're watching.
- Voyeurism strictly prohibits the viewers from engaging in the activities that they're watching.

Performative Kink Play

- Performative Kink Play refers to kink activities that are centered around theatricality, roleplay, and adopting predefined personas.
- It often involves costumes, a higher emphasis on acting or playing a particular role, and a focus on the presentation and the process rather than organic intimacy.
- Some forms of Performative Kink Play are designed to be more like a stage performance for fellow kink event attendees to enjoy. This usually involves some form of heavy planning ahead of time rather than just “going with the flow.”
- It's also not uncommon for Performative Kink Play to involve a script.
- Other forms of Performative Kink Play focus heavily on the roleplay aspect (such as heavy RP hunts and other character-driven scene scenarios), and thus center around how the projected characters interact with each other within the context of the scene itself.

Performative Kink Play and Exhibitionism

- There is definitely an aspect of Exhibitionism built into Performative Kink Play, as it typically involves putting one's exposed body on display for others to enjoy.
- The idea of being put on display in front of other consenting viewers while playing one's part in a scripted scene adds its own layer of appeal to those who enjoy "putting on a show."
- Performative Kink Play doesn't necessarily require an outside audience; sometimes one's play partner is all the audience that is needed for a particular scene.

Performative Kink Play and Voyeurism

- The obvious draw of Voyeurism to Performative Kink Play is that the onlookers get to see something specially crafted for their viewing pleasure.
- While the organic intimacy may not be the primary focus of the exchange on display, Performative Kink Play can be designed for an outside audience to “participate” in by being an extra set of eyes to witness the scene at hand.
- While Voyeurism is defined as secretly watching something that you’re not supposed to be seeing, there’s undeniably something special about bearing witness to something intimate and kinky that was specially designed for your viewing pleasure.

In Conclusion...

Exhibitionism, Voyeurism, and Performative Kink Play all have a LOT of overlap with one another in complementary ways. It's arguable that attending a Kinky Play Event inherently encourages all three of these elements to be part of the general experience for all attendees.
